Mr. Shreekant Javalgekar, MD & CEO, MCX said: “The global commodity markets witnessed a sharp dip in volumes due to low volatility in commodity prices resulting in low demand for risk management instruments. It is heartening to note that despite an adverse business environment, MCX has maintained its profitability. Also, MCX’s market share increased to 87.3% from 86% in the previous year and we retained the third position globally. Moreover, for CY2012, MCX was the world’s largest exchange in gold and silver futures, second largest in copper and natural gas futures, and the third largest in crude oil futures.”
